

My role in getting adults to volunteer

I will be an ambassador for Scouting

If others see how much I gain from my volunteering, or how passionate I am they may show an interest to find out more. The way I talk about Scouting to friends work colleagues and parents makes a huge difference.

I will support the Young Leaders' Scheme

Young leaders are the future and already know Scouting. I can look out for Young Leaders who demonstrate skills in certain areas that we may need.

I will be a role model

By helping people, engaging with them positively and passing on Scouting values.

I will show that it's fun

By having fun myself and allowing others to experience this fun, it will encourage them to join.

I will be seen

By getting involved in the local community, this raises awareness.

I will be relevant

By promoting Scouting activities that engage with the community and develop young people.

I will invite people to help

Sometimes people just need to be asked. I will invite them to a meeting and see if interest grows. The main reason adults try volunteering is because someone they know has offered them a personal invitation.

I will create awareness of the opportunities that Scouting offers

Volunteering within Scouting isn't just about working with young people. I need to promote all elements of Scouting.

I will create awareness of the role other people play in recruitment

I should ensure that people within my Group, District or Area are aware of their role in recruitment and the fact that they have access to parents and young leaders. This may mean they need to plan refresher training or targeted workshops.
